Slide 34 of 53

What Events Lead Up To...

- Let's you categorize the Trigger Events that lead up to this purchase
- What changed?
- What made this a priority?
- What events lead up to this purchase?
- What made you buy?
 - Not, what made you buy from us

Slide 35 of 53

When Did They Happen?

- Trigger Events make people emotional
- Emotional people change their buying habits
- The more emotional the more likely they are to act
- Get to customers when they are emotional enough to jump over the hurdles of becoming your customer
- Demand compression

Slide 36 of 53

Demand Compression

Slide 37 of 53

© COPYRIGHT Craig Elias 2002 - 2007

What Made You Choose Us?

- Notice I did not ask why?
- Not the usual feature and benefit 'fluff'
- What mental gymnastics did the customer do to apply your product or service to their business.
 - Prevents future forms of mental gymnastics
 - Sales training is about improved customer acquisition & customer retention while selling at higher prices, having shorter sales cycles, and higher close ratios

Slide 38 of 53

What Could We Have Done Better?

- Understand the buyer's expectations
- Just because you won the business does not mean you were perfect
- This focuses on the hurdles related to the process of buying from you not the outcome they received
- Lowering the hurdles to becoming your customer means people don't have to be as emotional in the future

Performance Vs. Expectations

- $P/E \geq 1$ = Status Quo
 - As long as the performance of the current solution / provider is greater expectations, the buyer remains satisfied and stays in Status Quo.
- $P/E \leq 1$ = Window of Dissatisfaction
 - A Window of Dissatisfaction is created when Trigger Events cause:
 1. A buyers expectations be greater than the current suppliers performance
 2. A current suppliers performance to be less than the buyers expectations
